FEATURES OF SIMULATION OF COMMUNICATION SITUATIONS IN A FOREIGN LANGUAGE

Annotation: The importance of using such an innovative method of teaching a foreign language as situational modeling is considered. The expediency of using the communicative situation as the main unit of situational modeling in a foreign language is substantiated, as well as the need to select extralinguistic and speech material for the implementation of communication situations in a foreign language.

Key words: communicative situation, situational modeling, extralinguistic and speech material.

Важной задачей обучения иноязычной речи является создание на практических занятиях по иностранному языку условий реального общения. В отсутствие естественной ситуации общения и протекания иноязычной речевой деятельности в процессе обучения целесообразно создание

In conclusion, intensive listening activities require attention to specific contrasts of form — grammatical, lexical, or phonological — the teacher can easily adapt the activities to more proficient students by increasing the complexity of the language forms.

HUMOUR AS AN INNOVATIVE METHOD FOR ENHANCING STUDENTS' MOTIVATION TO LEARN FOREIGN LANGUAGES

Abstract: Currently, the abundance of different technology, foreign language teaching applications and different teaching approaches create favourable condition to learn a foreign language. In the process of foreign language acquisition, motivation plays a crucial role. One of the ways to motivate students during the class and to sustain this motivation is employing humour. This article discusses the theoretical basis of how humour can be used as a tool to motivate students and sets some practical examples.

Keywords: motivation, humour, effects of humour, humour as pedagogical tool, humour as linguistic material, humour as cultural material

YUMOR – TALABALARNING CHET TILLARINI O'RGANISHMOTIVATSIYASINI RIVOJLANTIRISHNING INNOVATION METODI SIFATIDA

Annotatsiya: Hozirgi kunda turli hil texnologiyalar, chet tillarini o'qitish dasturlari va turli hil yondashuvlar ko'pligi chet tilini o'rganish uchun qulay sharoit yaratmoqda. Chet tillarni o'zlashtirish jarayoni demotivatsiya hal qiluvchi ahamiyatga ega. Dars davomida o'quvchilarni motivatsiyasini oshirish va ushbu motivatsiyani barqaror davom etishini ta'minlash uchun qo'llash mumkin bo'lgan metodlardan biri bu yumordan foydalanishdir. Ushbu maqolada yumordan talabalarni motivatsiyasini oshirish vositasi sifatida foydalanishning nazariy asoslari muhokama qilinadi, shuningdek ba'zi amaliy misollar keltiriladi.

In the 21st century teaching and learning a foreign language has moved on a higher level. On the one hand, novel know-how technology emerge year by year which enables the learner to acquire a foreign language material autonomously at his/her own pace, in any place and with other community of learners or alone (e.g. virtual reality tools such as Mondly.com or Virtual Speech; a foreign language learning applications such as Duolingo or LingQ; virtual reality language learning and teaching communities in Second Life). On the other hand, currently, innovative approaches (e.g. Task-Based Approach, Project-Based Approach, Lexical Syllabus, Content and Language Integrated Learning and) are being employed vastly to enhance a foreign language competence in educational institutions and language schools.

To learn a foreign language, one of the most significant elements is motivation. According to Cambridge Dictionary [1] motivation is defined as “willingness to do something, or something that causes such willingness”. Samatova [2] affirms that motivation directs individuals towards reaching goals, thus, it determines the means and the methods to attain them. It is extremely substantial for the learning process because it is an igniting source for students' active learning and condition for increasing learning effectiveness. Dörnyei and Kubanyiova [3] state that there are three essential sources of motivation to learn a foreign or second language: "(1) the learner's internal desire to become an effective L2 user, (2) social pressures coming from the learner's environment to master the L" and (3) the experience of being engaged in the L2 learning process" (22). It can be seen that the ideas of Dörnyei and Kubanyiova [3] are closely related to life. Furthermore, from the research on motivation which was done previously, one can synthesize the main two types of motivation: intrinsic motivation and extrinsic one (in some other research a distinction is also made between instrumental and integrative motivation [4]). In language teaching and learning being intrinsically motivated is characterized as a person's inner will learn a foreign language. In other words, an intrinsically motivated learner is highly interested in the culture, customs and traditions as well as the native people of the target language country. Whereas, an extrinsically motivated learner has usually an outer push or a beneficial goal to learn a language. As examples for extrinsically motivated learners, one can indicate a professional who seeks better job opportunities with the help of acquiring a foreign language or a student who wants to pass an exam at school in a foreign language class [4]. According to Soureshjani and Naseri, intrinsic motivation can be associated with the integrative type of motivation and extrinsic motivation with the instrumental one [5].

Hence, success in foreign language learning depends highly on motivation and the main question is how to keep the learners motivated along their path of acquisition of a new language's material. One of the ways can sound eccentric, however, approved in multiple studies, is using humour in the classroom. Feeling amused while doing a task or having a favourable communication with the teacher without barriers and being tuned positively while performing in a group-work are some of the benefits that humour can bring into the class. Wagner and Urios-Aparisi [6] while noting the effects which humour can have during the lesson emphasized that in a class in which the use of humour is well established, the students tended to have higher motivation. Chiasson [7] stated that the usage of humour during the class can eliminate the barriers the shy students may experience and give them the motivation to express themselves without being afraid of a potential "humiliation" afterwards. According to Muñoz-Basols [8], the effect of amusement which humour can grant to a lesson is an essential motivating factor in the class. Importantly, students feel free to express their thoughts and the teacher-initiated humour establishes a strong rapport with them, thus, creating a light atmosphere. Here it should be noted that humour can be utilized as a pedagogical tool or as lingual and cultural material to teach during the lesson. Using humour as a pedagogical tool implies utilizing it to achieve pedagogical goals such as building rapport, motivating students while doing a task, pointing at students mistake less seriously but effectively, thus, motivating him/her to remember the mistake and not to repeat it (because humour usually uses analytical and cognitive skills of a person to understand it and build images in mind which can be well associated with learning and retention process), managing the classroom, engaging students in the class, increasing attendance, retaining the lesson's material, eliminating the "affective filter" [9], raising the attention to the class, bringing students together...etc. Moreover, humour can also be used as the lingual material, in other words, according to Anthony [10], humour also plays a linguistic role in the class, which can be characterized as using humour as a tool to introduce linguistic forms. For example, one can do grammar tasks with humorous texts (e.g. jokes) in which the main point can be practising modal verb "can" (in the example below, students should choose the positive or negative form of the modal verb "can" regarding the given context in the joke):

- Waiter, I (can/can't) eat this soup
- > I'm sorry, sir. I'll get the manager.
- (Manager arrives.)
- I'm afraid I (can/can't) eat this soup
- > I'm sorry, sir. I'll call the cook.
- (Cook arrives.)
- I'm sorry, but I (can/can't)
- > Why not, sir?
- Because I don't have a spoon!" [11]

Additionally, humour can be used to introduce the target culture's humorous discourse as authentic regional studies material (e.g. British comedy sketches or hilarious British songs, British jokes and cartoons). However, it should be noted that using humour to introduce the culture of the target language can be challenging because to understand the punch line from the context, the students must have some cultural information [12]. As an example, see the image below in which one can see an old lady saying an ironic remark to a youngster. Students may feel difficulty to understand the punch line in the given statement if they do not know that in some of the western countries, it may be because of fashion that some of the youth can have oversize trousers.

To conclude, motivation is crucial to sustain foreign language learning and achieve success. One of the approaches to increase motivation in a foreign language class may be using humour and humorous elements as a pedagogical tool and if needed as linguistic and cultural material to teach. It is noteworthy that humour has a lot of functions in the classroom. Thus, if used on a measured basis and with certain aim, humour may motivate students to learn more, engage in the class and feel free to express their opinions.
